

FAU High School Rated “A” by Florida Department of Education

The Florida Department of Education has released the 2012-13 high school grades. Florida Atlantic University Schools is proud to share the results for Florida Atlantic University High School. Once again FAU High School received an “A” grade.

The Florida Comprehensive Assessment Test is a key instrument in calculating school grades. High schools include several additional measures, including the four-year graduation rate, the graduation rate for at-risk students, participation and performance in accelerated curricula, and postsecondary readiness, as well as a component for measuring annual growth or decline in these measures.

According to Superintendent of Schools, Dr. Valerie J. Bristor, “I am so proud of our high school. It’s a true testament to the hard work of students, teachers and our school-based administrators.”

The Florida Department of Education released 2011-12 grades for elementary and middle schools in July of 2012. A.D. Henderson received an “A” grade for the 13th consecutive year.
